The former CEO of China Inc. famously remarked that a revolution begins when an individual boldly declares "NO!"

This profound insight resonated with Emil, who found a striking parallel between the wisdom of this influential leader and the sentiments articulated by Mrs. Nancy Reagan, the revered patron saint of his Palmdale Chapter of the Jesuits of Truth.

Mrs. Reagan's impassioned plea for individuals to simply say "NO!" serves as a powerful reminder of the importance of personal agency and moral conviction in the face of societal pressures.

Both figures, though from vastly different contexts, underscore the transformative potential of individual resistance and the pivotal role it plays in instigating change.

Emil's exploration of these themes highlights the enduring relevance of their messages, encouraging a culture of assertiveness and integrity in confronting challenges.

Historians often converge on the significance of the influential figures who shaped modern China, particularly in the context of the nearly century-long struggle waged by Chinese patriots against a backdrop of corruption and exploitation.

This tumultuous period was marked by the relentless efforts of individuals striving to liberate their homeland from the clutches of corrupt Taipans, warlords, Triad gangsters, and an array of foreign opportunists who profited from the disintegration of the once-mighty Imperial Empire.

In this volume, the focus shifts to the countless, often nameless patriots who bravely rose to the occasion, dedicating their resources, and in many cases, sacrificing their lives in the pursuit of restoring China to its former glory.

Their collective struggle and unwavering commitment to national rejuvenation underscore the profound impact of grassroots movements in shaping the trajectory of a nation grappling with the challenges of modernity and imperialism.

In this edition, The Starving Artist Formally Known as Emil has chosen to pay tribute to a selection of long-overlooked heroes, including ordinary individuals and courageous women, through his latest Art Showcase.

This initiative aims to bring their stories to light, emphasizing the importance of remembrance even when their family names have faded from memory.

Emil draws inspiration from the beliefs of the Navajo people of his homeland, who hold that honoring the departed allows them to continue their existence in the afterlife, walking in the benevolent presence of the Great Spirit.

By illustrating these figures, Emil hopes to not only preserve their legacies but also to evoke a sense of connection and reverence for those who have shaped the fabric of history, albeit quietly and without recognition.

The veracity of such claims remains uncertain, leaving us to ponder the complexities of Emil's interpretations regarding the metaphysical aspects of the Multiverse.

It is essential to acknowledge that this subject transcends my expertise, relegating my contributions to mere opinion rather than authoritative insight.

Nevertheless, Emil's intriguing mantra, “What do we have to lose?” invites us to reflect on the implications of our inquiries into these profound topics.

This perspective encourages a sense of openness and curiosity, prompting us to consider the potential benefits of exploring the unknown, even if the answers elude us.

Thus, I find it prudent to pause here and embrace the question Emil poses, as it encapsulates the essence of our quest for understanding in the face of uncertainty.
